Amida Care Condemns Trump Administration’s Proposed Public Charge Rule

New York, NY (October 4, 2018) – Doug Wirth, president and CEO of Amida Care, New York’s largest not-for-profit Medicaid Special Needs Health Plan (SNP), made the following statement in response to the Trump Administration and Department of Homeland Security’s proposed “public charge” rule that would penalize documented immigrants who use critical public services, including accessing public health programs like Medicaid:

“The Trump Administration’s proposed rule to penalize documented immigrants who access vital social services undermines our ideals as a nation, and the impact on public health and state budgets will be catastrophic. Make no mistake about it—under this proposal, millions of people throughout the United States will avoid seeking medical attention, which is incredibly dangerous on a number of levels. Rather than punish immigrants, we should ensure they are connected to the services they need, like health care, housing, and food assistance, to live productive lives and contribute to our communities,” said Wirth.

“This proposed rule will be especially damaging to our attempt to end the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Immigrants living with HIV will not be able to get the treatment they need to become virally suppressed, which is devastating for their health and makes it more likely that they will transmit the virus on to others. In addition, fewer individuals who are HIV negative will be connected to proven HIV prevention methods, like pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP). This proposed rule also makes no sense from a fiscal point of view. It will lead to new cases of HIV, which are expensive to treat—one new HIV infection can amount to as much as $500,000 in lifetime medical costs. It will also drive immigrants away from primary and preventive care and force more immigrants living with HIV and other chronic conditions to seek regular care in hospital emergency rooms, which is also more costly to taxpayers,” Wirth added.
