Amida Care Applauds NYS Legislature for Repealing “Walking While Trans” Loitering Law

(New York, NY) - Doug Wirth, President & CEO of Amida Care, New York’s largest not-for-profit Medicaid Special Needs Health Plan (SNP), which is dedicated to breaking down health disparities and advocating for health equity for underserved communities, issued the following statement in response to the New York State Legislature repealing a statute that allows police to use their discretion to interpret what constitutes loitering for prostitution. In practice, the majority of those targeted for enforcement are transgender and non-binary people who are people of color:

“For too long, this discriminatory loitering statute has been used to unfairly target and harass people of transgender experience, particularly transgender women of color, simply for existing. Transgender individuals already face discrimination at nearly every turn, as Amida Care detailed in a recent report. This results in devastating consequences for their health care access, housing, employment opportunities, and more. We commend the Legislature for recognizing that this discriminatory treatment cannot be tolerated, and for protecting the rights of transgender and non-binary New Yorkers.”

“We thank Senate Majority Leader Andrea Stewart-Cousins and Speaker Carl Heastie for their leadership on this important issue, and Senator Brad Hoylman and Assembly Member Amy Paulin for their work on this legislation. We owe a deep debt of gratitude to all of the advocates who pushed this issue to the forefront. We encourage Governor Cuomo to sign this legislation into law immediately.”
